2. What is a cookie?

In general, a cookie is a small text and number file that the website can send and store in your web browser, on your mobile device and/or on the hard drive of your computer during your visit to the website. Cookies help me, for example, to remember your language preferences when using the website, so that I can immediately set these preferences as default when you revisit the website.

There are different types of cookies:

- Essential or strictly necessary cookies are (as their name indicates) necessary to be able to use a website. They ensure, for example, that a certain connection can be established. These cookies can be used without your prior consent.
- Functional cookies are cookies that enable a website to offer certain functions you have requested. They contain information about your choices and preferences on our website (e.g. cookies for remembering log-in or registration details, your language preference, products in your shopping cart). These cookies can be used without your prior consent.

- Non-functional cookies are cookies that can be placed for statistical, social, targeting and commercial purposes. They have nothing to do with the purely technical support of the website. These cookies can only be used with your prior consent.

In some cases, but certainly not always, cookies also collect certain personal data, such as the identification number of your computer.

If you click on these social media buttons, it is possible that the social network in question places a cookie in order to retrieve your identity on the respective social network or to determine your preferences. More information about which cookies are used by these social networks can be found in the privacy and cookie statements of these social networks. Therefore, please always read the privacy and cookie statements of the respective social networks carefully. I cannot influence the content of these cookie statements or the content of the cookies of these third parties
